"A Night Off."

For our theatre patrons, the following synopsis of the above play may be of interest: A professor writes a tragedy, but is horrified lest his family learn of it. One daughter, however, and his son-in-law are in the secret. The night of the performance comes, and it is only through the most tragic misadventure that the three plotters escape. Meanwhile, a happy little love affair develops and the last act comes to a climax with the startling statement of the producer of the tragedy that the play was a howling success. Chaired beyond words by this statement, the professor is plunged into unutterable woe when he is informed that when his play threatened ruin the company produced "A Night Off."
